Know Your Status

When the FDA licensed the first HIV blood test in 1985, it was an enormous victory for health advocates, making the test one of our 100 Objects That Shaped Public Health.

Over the past 35 years, nearly 35 million people have died of HIV and 70 million have been infected. Since the approval of the first blood test, treatments have improved and home HIV tests are making it easier for people to know their status and seek treatment.

Check GHN every Wednesday for an up-close look at one of the objects that made the list published by the Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health.

Doctor's Hours

American medical residents are expected to work shifts lasting up to 28 hours and as many as 80 hours a week. These outrageous demands put "both caregivers and patients at risk," writes lawyer Ryan Park in The Atlantic.

Park, in part, blames the "match" system that places residents at hospitals for driving their salaries down and their hours up. And he says new rules established over the past 15 years or so have had a limited effect on residents' working lives.

Meanwhile, a recent poll, he writes, found most Americans would request a new doctor if they knew their physician had been on the job for nearly 24 hours.

Tuberculosis

A Test for High-Risk Kids

A simple TB screening test commonly used on adults could predict whether children infected with TB bacteria are likely to become sick, according to a new study published in The Lancet Respiratory Medicine.

Researchers from Stanford and 5 other institutions said that the QuantiFERON-TB assay could be particularly useful in countries like South Africa, considered high-risk for TB yet lacking adequate screening tests for children.

Lead author Jason Andrews, an assistant professor of medicine at Stanford Medicine, said he hopes the study will prompt changes in WHO guidelines, which currently don't recommend use of the test in children.
